SCIENTIFIC INTERESTS

I am an expert in using semi-analytic methods to model the formation of galaxies and AGN in the early universe and their subsequent impact on the reionization of the intergalactic hydrogen and helium. Throughout my doctoral thesis studies, I published a series of well-received ‘Semi-analytic forecasts for JWST’ papers, which deliver a wide variety of predictions for high-redshift objects that are expected to be detected by JWST, providing insights for how future observations can constrain the underlying physical processes. I am an active member on numerous observing teams that utilize HST, JWST, and other ground-based instruments; I am also a member of the Roman Space Telescope Cosmic Dawn Science Investigation Team.
